Progress Report:

Javier lived in three different places during the first semester, so had to deal with moves and many adjustments. He also had several unexcused absences during December, and his grades were negatively affected. Once Javier's living situation became more stable, he had tutoring for help in math and did several extra credit assignments to bring his grades up. He worked diligently, and his second semester and final grades were all Bs and Cs.

His group home placement seems to be meeting his needs. Staff there is very interested and involved in his activities and overall well-being. Their willingness to transport him to and from school every day is most appreciated. It's been important for Javier to stay in the same school all year. This has helped stabilize him and has kept him connected to his friends and favorite teachers, which means a lot to him.

Javier is sociable and has many friends of both sexes. He's cooperative in class and gets along well with teachers and classmates. He has an "artsy" bent and is particularly interested in drama. Javier has expressed interest in further developing his artistic talents and should be encouraged to take a drawing or pottery class next year through the arts program.
